

The North American Southwest is, as the name implies, the southwestern quadrant of the continent. Covering over a million square miles, it is divided about equally between the United States and Mexico.